THIS SUNDAY'S REFLECTION

JOHN 14:15-17

I will not leave you orphans; I will come to you.

Even as Jesus prepares for death he shows concern for his disciples. He has been their advocate for three short years. Now he promises to send a new advocate who will continue to counsel and console them. This new advocate will serve as a comforter and guide, helping them cope with the daily strain of keeping the commandments.

This promise made to the disciples of Jesus is also intended for those of us who claim to be his disciples today. The Spirit of Truth will do more than just stand beside us in our moments of crisis. This Spirit will enter into us, abide with us, dwell within us.

Waiting for the Spirit of Truth, the Holy Spirit, is not just something we do the week before Pentecost. This holy waiting must become part of our daily spiritual practice.

Sometimes in moments of need I go to everyone else for assistance before turning to the abiding Presence of the Spirit within me.

If we take Jesus' promise not to leave us orphans seriously, we will find ourselves asking and waiting for that guidance every day.

Reflection: When have I been aware of the presence of the Spirit within me? How will I make time to wait for the guidance of that Spirit each day?

Macrina Wiederkehr, O.S.B.

Scholarship Opportunity

The Knights of Columbus continue to support the younger members of our flock. One way that they lend a hand is through college scholarships. They are now accepting applications for the scholarships. Applications are available through the OLM Website or the church office. Along with an application, a brief essay is required and a certified and sealed most recently available transcript from the applicant's school. The application deadline is Friday, May 29. Remind others who may be interested. Watch the weekly bulletin and the parish webpage.

Connecting with people from the Parish

Are you missing the people that you see regularly at Mass or other church events?
 Take a moment and close your eyes.
 Imagine that you are sitting in your regular pew.
 Hear the sounds around you before Mass.
 See someone come in who normally sits near you.
 See their smile.
 Exchange a warm greeting.
 Share with them your struggle of these past seven weeks.
 Listen to their story.
 What has changed for you?
 How have you encountered Christ through this experience?
 What have you discovered about yourself or others?
 What are you doing differently that you hope to continue?
 What new developments have you experienced in prayer?
 Imagine your embrace of the other in a new sense of unconditional love.
 Rest in the warm emotions that flood into your heart.
 Rejoice for your encounter with the Risen Christ.

SOCIAL JUSTICE

The current pandemic has brought educational inequality into sharp relief. According to UNESCO, the pandemic has forced school closures in 191 countries, affecting at least 1.5 billion students and 63 million primary and secondary teachers. With most of the world's students now at home due to COVID-19, the pandemic is revealing startling divides in digitally-based distance learning, data from the UN education and cultural agency, UNESCO, and partners has revealed. They found that half of all students currently out of the classroom – or nearly 830 million learners globally -- do not have access to a computer. Additionally, more than 40 per cent have no Internet access at home. Disparities in distance education are particularly evident in low-income countries. Nearly 90 per cent of students in sub-Saharan Africa do not have household computers while 82 per cent are unable to get online.

In the United States, about 17 percent of students nationwide lack a computer at home, according to a 2019 analysis by the Associated Press. Eighteen percent lack broadband internet access. Low-income families and families of color are especially likely to be without these resources, according to the AP. Rural and low income urban communities are particularly disadvantaged in the switch to distance learning. In Wyoming, for example, just under 3 percent of students lack internet, and about 14 percent lack broadband, according to Education Department statistics gathered in 2017 and analyzed by the AP. But in Washington, DC, 19 percent of students have no internet and 34 percent have no broadband. In Charleston, South Carolina, 4,000 of the district's 50,000 students have no internet, according to US News & World Report.

Around the country, many students lack access to a computer at home, from around 8 percent in Utah to 28 percent in DC. For low or moderate income families, if there is a computer or tablet in the home, it must be shared by all household members, a difficulty when several children are required to spend multiple hours with on-line instruction.

Access to digital instruction is not the only struggle facing low income children. Low income families are far less likely to be able to work from home than higher income families. Parents who do not speak English, know how to reach out to the teacher or who are not familiar with the technology leave children at a steep disadvantage, as does crowded homes, learning disabilities and family instability. Chronic hunger makes it difficult to learn under the best of circumstances. Each day, the National School Lunch Program serves over 30 million children, the School Breakfast Program serves over 14.7 million children and the Child and Adult Care Food Program serves over 6.1 million children, according to CNBC. With schools around the country closed, many of these children and their families are experiencing severe food insecurity, even short term malnutrition.

Amidst school closures, many fear that millions of these students will go hungry.

SPECIAL COLLECTION'S UPDATE
